Having a design at pleasure, of a Cornich, Architrave, etc: and wanting to have the same larger or smaller, proceed as follows. a,b increased from c,d. and vice versa c,d decreased from a b. The first is by ruling upon c d the diagonal line e f. which is the height of a b, and as the extremities e f gives the height a b so every other intersection upon the diagonal, taken perpendicularly, will give the height of all other members still retaining the same proportion... c,d is decreased from a b by first ruling horizontally c d, then the height of a b drawn diagonally as e f. every member of the Cornich a b. brought upon the diagonal, will compleat the same Cornich of smaller size than a b. The same Cornich c d might be done smaller by ruling c d nearer in height, and also a b, made larger by ruling the diagonal longer. The same method will assist ye to increase or decrease any other mouldings, as bases, Surbases etc.....
